Castle Rock Chamber of Commerce Joins Southern Colorado Business Partnership

May 27, 2010 | Colorado Springs, Colorado: The Castle Rock Chamber of Commerce is the latest new member to join the Southern Colorado Business Partnership, which has grown to include over a dozen regional and demographic business organizations in and around the front range. Recent expansion now borders the group's reach and influence north and south from Castle Rock to Pueblo, east to west from Woodland Park to the Eastern Plains – along with most metro points in between.

The Castle Rock Chamber of Commerce was established in 1955 and has grown along with a unique community which benefits from small town charm, the beauty of its surrounding open space and its close proximity to the State's two major markets - Denver & Colorado Springs. The city boasts over 2700 businesses, ranging from large national retail and restaurant chains to locally owned and operated companies. Over 100 new businesses are drawn to the community each year, due to its tremendous rate of growth and market affluence.

"Adding our new partner in Castle Rock illustrates our steady outreach" said SCBP President Debbie Miller, "and we are excited about expanding to this northern border to increase the group by number, range and influence."

Pam Ridler has served as the President/CEO of the Castle Rock Chamber of Commerce for eleven years, following six years as the Vice President of the Fort Collins Area Chamber of Commerce. She received her Certified Chamber Executive designation from the American Chamber of Commerce Executives in 2006, and is a past-president of the Colorado Chamber of Commerce Executives (CCCE).
